“ I don't even know where to begin. I lost my mom. My best friend. I know she will always be here for me, watching me, guiding me through everyday life. I just don't know what to do now. I'm only 15 and it will be so long before I'll get to see her again. Little things like her texting me when food was ready or if I needed to do something because she was across the house or on the couch and didn't want to yell all the way to my room. Just things like that is what gets me. And now I won't get to call her when I need to or go and give her a big hug. I'm just glad that the night before I gave her probably the biggest hug I had ever given her and told her that I love her. God may she Rest In Peace and guide me and my family through everyday life.

My sweet Brantley,

I have always thought your mom has two amazing children, but as I have seen you the past few weeks I not only know now you two are amazing but the grace and understanding that I have seen from you two are far from amazing. You two are the example of what a wonderful Christian mom can raise. I am soo proud to say your mom is my sister and her two precious babies are the gifts she has blessed the world with. You are a blessing my amazing nephew.

Love you sooo much. Aunt Kristina xoXo

“ Amanda was always so sweet to me when I tagged along with my brother to visit her and Bo. On one of those occasions, Amanda had us all watch the movie Elf, which became my favorite movie. And it still is. When I need a pick-me-up, I watch that movie—even if it's in the middle of the summer. Now, I'll forever remember Amanda, and her laugh & smile, anytime I revisit this movie that she introduced to me.

Sending love to the family.

“ Watching and listening to her with her children was one of the best things. She was so patient when listening to them and she talked to them so sweet. I loved watching Bo look at her, it was like he feel in love with her every time she walked by. I will miss her sweet text messages just to check on me. She will be missed so much. I love you Amanda and I am so thankful for the past 2.5 years of being a bigger part of your life. Rest In Peace sweetheart
